

Wireless Sales Script Bundle

By Warren Davis | Cellular Sales — Verizon's #1 Authorized Retailer

HOW TO USE THIS BUNDLE

Each script below is a proven, field-tested framework. Read it, internalize it, then make it yours. The goal is not to sound scripted — it's to never be caught off guard. Work through each section in order. The money is in the follow-up and the close.

SCRIPT 1: The Cold Walk-In Opener

Situation: Customer walks into the store browsing.

“Hey, welcome in! Just so you know — no pressure, take your look around. But if you’ve got 60 seconds I can show you something most people don’t know about [Verizon/current promo] that could actually save you money on your bill. You interested?”

Why it works: You removed pressure, gave them control, and created curiosity. Most reps make the mistake of jumping straight to “What can I help you with?” — which triggers “just looking.”

Follow-up if they say no: > “No worries at all. I’ll be right here if anything catches your eye.”
(Then let them browse — hover too close and you lose them.)

SCRIPT 2: The Bill Audit Opener

Situation: Customer comes in to pay their bill or asks about their plan.

“I can take care of that for you. While I pull up your account, do you mind if I take a quick look at your plan? I find a lot of people are on plans that made sense a year ago but there’s something better now — and I’d feel bad not telling you.”

Why it works: You positioned yourself as an advisor, not a salesperson. You made them feel like you’re looking out for them.

Transition into upgrade: > “Okay so I’m looking at your plan right now — you’re on [X plan] paying $Y/month. If I could get you [more data / a new phone / better deal] for around the same price, would that be worth five minutes of your time?”

SCRIPT 3: The Trade-In Close

Situation: Customer is interested in a new phone but hesitant on price.

“I totally get it — phones are expensive. Here’s what I want to show you though. With your current phone as a trade-in, you could walk out today with the [new model] for as low as $X/month — sometimes even less than what you’re paying now. Want me to run the numbers real quick to see what we’re working with?”

Key: Always say “run the numbers” — it sounds analytical, not salesy. People trust numbers.

If they say their trade-in is old/broken: > “Honestly, even older phones have value right now. I’ve seen people trade in phones from 4 years ago and still get a solid credit. Let me look it up — takes 30 seconds and you lose nothing by knowing.”

SCRIPT 4: The Add-A-Line Script

Situation: Customer is upgrading or paying their bill and you want to explore adding a line.

“Quick question — is everyone in your household on this account, or do you have family members on a different carrier?”

(Wait for answer)

“I ask because right now when you add a line, you’re actually bringing the cost per line down. So you’d technically be saving money per person and getting everyone on the same network. Is that something that makes sense for your family?”

Why it works: You reframed adding a line as saving money — which is true on family plans. You’re not selling, you’re informing.

SCRIPT 5: The Accessory Upsell

Situation: Customer just agreed to a new phone or plan.

“Last thing before we wrap up — I want to make sure you’re protected. I’ve seen too many people crack a screen the first week. We’ve got cases starting at $X and the insurance plan is only $Y/month. Which one do you want to grab — both, or just one?”

Key: Offer two options, not yes/no. Binary close. People will choose one rather than say no.

SCRIPT 6: The Objection Handlers

“I need to think about it.”

“Totally fair. What’s the main thing you want to think through? Because if there’s something I haven’t answered yet, I’d rather tackle it now so you don’t have to make another trip.”

“I hear you. Let me ask — is it the monthly payment or the total that’s the concern? Because there’s usually a way to structure this so the monthly is actually comfortable.”

“I’m with [competitor].”

“Makes sense — they’ve got good marketing. What made you pick them originally? I ask because most people don’t know what Verizon’s network actually covers versus what they’re on now, and it’s worth the comparison.”

“I have to ask my spouse.”

“Of course — big decisions need both people. What if I set it up so you can walk out with everything ready and your spouse just has to say yes? That way you’re not making another trip.”

“I’ll just go online.”

“You absolutely can — and if you do, use my rep code [CODE] so it still gets credited to your account. But honestly, the promotions online don’t always match what I can do in-store. Let me check if there’s anything extra I can throw in before you go.”

SCRIPT 7: The Follow-Up Text (After No Sale)

Send within 24 hours:

“Hey [Name], it was great meeting you today. I checked and [the promo / the trade-in value / the plan] we talked about is still available. No pressure at all — just wanted to make sure you had everything you needed to make the best call for you. Let me know if any questions come up. — Warren”

Why: Most reps never follow up. This alone will close an extra 1–2 deals a week.

BONUS: The Daily Mindset Reset

Say this before every shift: “Every person who walks through that door is an opportunity to genuinely help someone. If I solve their problem, the sale takes care of itself.”

The reps who chase commission burn out. The reps who focus on serving close more.
